OPINION

Avninder Anttal

Is perfection the only way to success?

'Oh, you got excellent grades.'

'You did a perfect job, believe me.'

'I completed the prelims syllabus in just two months. Isn't it perfect?'

Excellent-Great-Flawless, there are plenty of words to describe perfection. But is perfection real? Or, in more exact words, is our success bound by perfection?

NO!

Perfectionism is a personality trait that makes you believe only flawlessness can achieve success. Going after perfection may not be wrong at primary levels, but once you climb the ladder of success, you'll crave perfection. A moment will come when nothing satisfies your perfectionist mentality, and you end up feeling like a failure. Until now, it may seem like an exaggeration, but recall those days when you wanted to be the best? Your 'best' was actually an obsession. Lately, I have realized that perfection is a utopia, and achieving absolutism in anything isn't possible. When we are obsessed with perfection, we undermine our abilities and end up losing really 'good' chances that could become a turning point in our life. I did it, and maybe you did too. It is only a matter of time before you leave your perfect shell and try to see the world as it is. Try to recall the summers which were at their best or the monsoon that didn't turn out well. If nature goes up and down, why do we run after something that is just an idea?

Your success depends on improvement. When you focus on improving yourself, you eventually embark on a journey to get closer to the 'perfect' idea of yourself. So, praise yourself for small achievements because every effort counts. Consistency is what you need to achieve the success you desire. Once you become consistent in your efforts, you will be successful.
