Advancing Global Research through Silkworm-Based Mycology Studies: CT Group & Teikyo University Collaboration

At CT Group, our commitment to excellence in research and global academic collaboration continues to open new frontiers. One of our most promising recent ventures is our partnership with Teikyo University Institute of Medical Mycology (TIMM), Japan — a collaboration that reflects the power of science beyond borders.

This international initiative is centered around an exciting and unconventional subject: silkworms. Under the expert guidance of Professor Vir Vikram and our dedicated research scholar Mr. Roy from CT University, this project dives deep into silkworm development and their complex interactions with fungal pathogens. The aim is not just academic — it's about uncovering critical insights into host-pathogen relationships, resistance mechanisms, and the overall understanding of fungal biology.

Our researchers had the opportunity to spend considerable time at TIMM, where they worked alongside globally respected scientists, including Dr. Atsushi Miyashita. Their academic engagement with Prof. Koichi Makimura, the Director of the Institute, further enriched the collaborative environment. The exposure to world-class infrastructure, advanced methodologies, and a global research culture has been transformative for our team.

What makes this collaboration particularly impactful is its alignment with CT University's vision — to drive innovation, encourage knowledge exchange, and build scientific partnerships that address global challenges. Teikyo University's legacy in medical mycology and antifungal research perfectly complements our mission of nurturing research that matters.

As we continue to explore this interdisciplinary alliance, we look forward to extending this partnership through faculty and student exchanges, shared publications, and deeper collaborative programs in the future. This is not just a research milestone — it's a gateway to a long-term relationship rooted in mutual academic excellence.

Through such initiatives, CT Group reinforces its place in the global academic landscape — where science connects people, institutions, and ideas.

CT University Shines Nationally: Dean Academics Dr. Simranjeet Kaur Gill Wins “Best Principal Award”

Recognised Among 430 Nominees Across Punjab for Excellence in Sustainability and Education Innovation

Award Presented by National EduTrust of India at Prestigious Ceremony Hosted by Chitkara University

CT University proudly announces a moment of exceptional pride and honor as Dr. Simranjeet Kaur Gill, Dean Academics, has been bestowed with the prestigious “Best Principal Award” by the National EduTrust of India, an organization registered under the Ministry of MSME, Government of India.

This distinguished recognition was awarded during the Sustainability Excellence Awards Ceremony held at Chitkara University, Punjab, where 13 Principals and 6 Nodal Officers were acknowledged for their outstanding contributions in sustainability, environmental leadership, and educational innovation.

The ceremony was graced by the Guest of Honour Jit Kumar Gupta, a stalwart in the fields of architectural education and urban policy, with a remarkable legacy spanning 55 years in sustainable development, smart cities, and green infrastructure.

Among a competitive pool of 430+ nominees from institutions across Punjab, Dr. Gill stood out for her forward-thinking academic leadership, commitment to sustainability, and her transformative work in higher education.

Her recognition reinforces CT University's commitment to nurturing responsible, future-ready leaders who drive innovation with social and environmental consciousness.

Samarth Sharma, CEO of National EduTrust of India, commended all winners, stating, “The awardees represent the true spirit of progressive education. Their efforts are not only reshaping institutions but also empowering communities and the next generation.”

CT University Embarks On Green Transformation With Micro-forest Launch

In a pioneering initiative to promote ecological balance and environmental sustainability, CT University launched its Micro-Forest Project, marking a historic step towards a greener and healthier future. Over 500 native tree and shrub species were planted on campus, creating a dense, self-sustaining green ecosystem designed to thrive for generations. This initiative aligns with CT University's vision of fostering environmental stewardship and holistic community well-being. Partnering with Mission Green Global, a renowned environmental organisation dedicated to ecological revival, the University aims to transform its landscape into a model of biodiversity and resilience. The micro-forest will enhance air quality, support local wildlife habitats, and create a natural sanctuary for students, staff, and the wider community. Prominent contributors who supported this vital mission include Satpal Singh Dehrka, Harnarayan Singh Dhillon, Madam Kanchan Gupta, and Neela Singh from Faridkot, whose commitment to sustainability and community service made this launch a success. Their active participation demonstrates a collective responsibility to protect and restore nature for future generations.
